

Diversity of in-house solicitors

10 January 2024

About the data

We ask all solicitors to provide their diversity information through their mySRA account once they are admitted. From this data, we built a profile of diversity among in-house solicitors. They are solicitors working in, for example, multinational corporations, local government, high-street businesses, charities and educational establishments. They make up around 20% of all practising solicitors.

It is not compulsory for solicitors to provide their diversity data, and the response rates vary for different characteristics. We are working to increase the declaration rate so we can report more fully in the future. However, we had sufficient data to report on sex, ethnicity and age. For all three characteristics, we have removed the unknown category but included those who prefer not to say.

This information was taken from our records as of 25 April 2023. It covers in-house solicitors with a practising certificate and those working without one in a Government department, which is 92% (33,584) of the in-house community. We have not included the 8% of solicitors who are admitted to the roll but do not have a practising certificate.

Where do in-house solicitors work

We categorise whether they work in the private sector, public sector and other sector organisations, with subcategories as shown:

- 66% work in private sector organisations
- 28% work in public sector organisations
 - 13% - local government
 - 7% - Crown Prosecution Service (CPS)
 - 4% - Government Legal Profession
 - 1% - court
 - 1% - Government body
 - 1% - Government funded service
- 6% work in other organisations
 - 2% - regulatory body
 - 2% - educational establishment
 - 1% - advice services.

Please note that the total numbers differ due to rounding.

When reporting on sex, ethnicity and age, due to the small numbers in certain sub - categories we will only show the breakdown for the largest subcategories where applicable:

- Private sector
- Public sector - the CPS and local government
- Other sector - educational establishments and regulatory bodies.
